Or at the minimum everything from Stardust.The present invention relates to an apparatus for the additive manufacture of three-dimensional articles from powdered materials, such as powdered metal alloys. Solid metal powders which have been heated to a plastic, semi-liquid state are hereinafter referred to as "green" powders. These are also commonly referred to in the art as "green" machinable powders. The present invention is in particular related to the production of metal articles from a powder "metallurgical" approach, such as known in the additive manufacturing art as "additive manufacturing". Additive manufacturing, commonly referred to as AM, is a process whereby metals and other powdered materials are added layer by layer to an article under the control of a computer to produce a three-dimensional article. An additive manufacturing process may be automated and may include a number of steps. According to one such method of producing an article using AM, a powder in a flowable state is dispensed from a supply chamber to a build chamber, in which the powder is solidified to form a green part. The green part is then assembled with a subsequent layer of powder, also in a flowable state, and the steps of dispensing and solidifying repeated to form the desired green part. The green part is then positioned in a sintering chamber, in which the green part is s
